What is BirdLife International?

BirdLife International is a world-wide partnership of conservation organisations that seeks to conserve all wild bird species and their habitats. The BirdLife Network is represented in over 100 countries around the world. In Europe, BirdLife International has 30 Partners, 5 Partners Designate and 7 Affiliates.

BirdLife International seeks to conserve all bird species on earth and their habitats, and through this, to work for the world's biological diversity and the sustainability of human use of natural resources.

The unique partnership of bird-oriented non-governmental organizations works towards these aims by:

- identifying priorities for bird and biodiversity conservation through scientific research and data collection.
- promoting conservation action for birds, using the Partnership to create a strong voice (for birds) to governments and other decision makers. The BirdLife Partnership can save many more birds than any one national organization can in isolation.
- carrying out national programmes of actions for birds, including managing species, sites and habitats, education and enlisting public support BirdLife divides the overall global task into programmes with a regional focus.

Programmes agreed by the regional Partners are now up and running in Africa (including associated islands), the Americas, Asia, Europe, Middle East and the Pacific. The programme's aims and objectives are always achieved by working through local communities.

The Partnership is co-ordinated by staff in Cambridge (UK), Brussels (Belgium), Quito (Ecuador), Nairobi (Kenya), Amman (Jordan), Tokyo (Japan) and Pacific (Fiji).
